Attachment Parenting international is proud to be in service to creating a more compassionate world, fulfilling its mission to help children flourish and support parents. As the authors of groundbreaking research, API is dedicated to helping guide our parents and community toward the principles ofsecure child attachment and the nurturing skills of secure parenting.

It seems so long ago now, but we came out of our 25th anniversary conference and into 2020 with knowledge shared by our thousand attendees, plans for an online conference, API is here to support families and we welcome you to join us!

THANK YOU, KAREN WALANT

API partnered with the National Parenting Education Network to draw attention to the importance of parenting education and support for today's parents. The board of directors met many times to form a strategy to guide and prioritize our activities and decisions. API is excited to announce the

One of the biggest efforts API undertook this year was to examine our work and identify how to best respond by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

The pandemic meant parent's lives were upended, adjusting to a new reality while helping their children adjust. API responded by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

API partnered with the National Parenting Education Network to draw attention to the importance of parenting education and support for today's parents. The board of directors met many times to form a strategy to guide and prioritize our activities and decisions. API is excited to announce the

One of the biggest efforts API undertook this year was to examine our work and identify how to best respond by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

The pandemic meant parent's lives were upended, adjusting to a new reality while helping their children adjust. API responded by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

API partnered with the National Parenting Education Network to draw attention to the importance of parenting education and support for today's parents. The board of directors met many times to form a strategy to guide and prioritize our activities and decisions. API is excited to announce the

One of the biggest efforts API undertook this year was to examine our work and identify how to best respond by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

The pandemic meant parent's lives were upended, adjusting to a new reality while helping their children adjust. API responded by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

API partnered with the National Parenting Education Network to draw attention to the importance of parenting education and support for today's parents. The board of directors met many times to form a strategy to guide and prioritize our activities and decisions. API is excited to announce the

One of the biggest efforts API undertook this year was to examine our work and identify how to best respond by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

The pandemic meant parent's lives were upended, adjusting to a new reality while helping their children adjust. API responded by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

API partnered with the National Parenting Education Network to draw attention to the importance of parenting education and support for today's parents. The board of directors met many times to form a strategy to guide and prioritize our activities and decisions. API is excited to announce the

One of the biggest efforts API undertook this year was to examine our work and identify how to best respond by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

The pandemic meant parent's lives were upended, adjusting to a new reality while helping their children adjust. API responded by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

API partnered with the National Parenting Education Network to draw attention to the importance of parenting education and support for today's parents. The board of directors met many times to form a strategy to guide and prioritize our activities and decisions. API is excited to announce the

One of the biggest efforts API undertook this year was to examine our work and identify how to best respond by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

The pandemic meant parent's lives were upended, adjusting to a new reality while helping their children adjust. API responded by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

API partnered with the National Parenting Education Network to draw attention to the importance of parenting education and support for today's parents. The board of directors met many times to form a strategy to guide and prioritize our activities and decisions. API is excited to announce the

One of the biggest efforts API undertook this year was to examine our work and identify how to best respond by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

The pandemic meant parent's lives were upended, adjusting to a new reality while helping their children adjust. API responded by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.

API partnered with the National Parenting Education Network to draw attention to the importance of parenting education and support for today's parents. The board of directors met many times to form a strategy to guide and prioritize our activities and decisions. API is excited to announce the

One of the biggest efforts API undertook this year was to examine our work and identify how to best respond by publishing support resources on working from home with children, helping recognize anxiety and other challenges parents may face in various environments. We used the time to research, gather data, participate in webinars, and learn how we can continue to support parents.